

How to Create a Great Bar

From the time your guests walk through the door it's all about the atmosphere you provide. Premium liquor, cold beer and a selective wine list are great starters for what to serve your guests, but making a good bar great means paying attention to all the details. From the background music to the type of lighting used, each aspect of your bar is like an essential ingredient used to build a specialty cocktail. Behind the bar, the bartender works best when everything is at arm's reach, minimizing the time it takes to reach for a glass, make a drink, pull a beer and wait on the next customer.

OVER-POURING CAN EQUAL UNDER-PROFITS

Many restaurants and bars lose money due to over-pouring drinks. From bartenders holding taps too long until they overfill glasses to heavy handed pouring of cocktail mixtures, maintaining a profitable bar can be difficult. Over-pouring by only a quarter of an ounce can mean losing an average of 20% on each bottle of liquor poured.

Consider this: an inexpensive or house vodka costs the bar about $6 or $7. Let's say the standard is 1 1/4 oz per drink, that means that there are approximately 30 shots in the bottle. When the bartender overpours by 1/4 oz, then approximately 1/5 of that bottle's revenue is lost. A bartender could easily lose $200 a night by over-pouring only 1/4 oz of alcohol per drink. Depending on the number of bartenders and the size of your bar, it is easy to calculate the amount of profits lost from over-pouring.
